The best way to find yourself is to lose yourself in the service of others.

~Mahatma Gandhi

From the time immemorial, humanity has been intrigued by its great leaders—state rulers, political leaders, royal kings, spiritual luminaries, and military leaders. Plato’s was perhaps the first thinker in the West to discuss the need and importance of proper leadership in his masterpiece, The Republic. Plato presents the inherent dichotomy of power vs. wisdom and concludes that humanity’s salvation depends upon the stewardship of its wise leaders. History has repeatedly borne out the truth of Plato’s wisdom.

In the modern times, leadership has emerged as a dynamic field of study and research. The search continues to discover how to use leadership power wisely for the common good. Servant-leadership represents an ideal form of leading by empowering and serving others.

Envisioned as a primary reference work, the proposed Palgrave Handbook of Servant-Leadership is a multi-author Major Reference Work (MRW) comprising a wide-ranging cadre of leading world-class scholars, practitioners and contributing authors from diverse fields of inquiry and specializations.

Servant-leadership is a happening field, fueled by the mounting research in the various positive forms of leadership over the last three decades. Servant-leadership represents a shift from followers serving leaders to leaders serving followers. This approach is especially relevant during the current turbulent times, given that many leaders today seem to have lost their moral bearings; they tend to misuse their power and seem to have forgotten about the mission of serving. For the most admired organizations today, there is a good chance that there is a servant-leader at the helm. Historically, our most cherished and exemplary leaders were servant-leaders.

Regarded by many authors as “a valid, modern theory of leadership,”¹ servant-leadership was first introduced by Robert K. Greenleaf’s powerful short essay written in 1970, titled “The Servant as Leader.” According to Greenleaf, “The servant-leader is servant first It begins with the natural feeling that one wants to serve, to serve first. That person is sharply different from one who is leader first.”²

Practicing servant-leadership is deceptively simple: one is led by the deep desire to serve others. It is also about putting others’ interest first. History is a testimony to the fact that true leaders, above all, are servant-leaders. There is no human ideal higher than the gift of selfless service. For in serving others humbly, we find our true purpose, joy and fulfillment.
